Rachel is a Post-doctoral Fellow at the School of Population of Health, UNSW. She has six years of experience working with government stakeholders, community partners and researchers from institutes across Australia to improve the translation of evidence-based programs into routine practices. She has used mixed methods research and implementation science to support the scale-up of interventions for mental health prevention, domestic and family violence and injury to improve holistic health outcomes for vulnerable populations. Her current focus is the co-design of an implementation strategy to improve the scale-up of point-of-care testing/treatment for hepatitis C in community health services and prisons.
